

Early Beginnings with Dimensional Stone

by David Larson

In a not-too-distant past, things were different. A lot different! Before health insurance, social security, pensions and union representation, doing the work seen above would have been done on broken backs. How long would it take before the human body would breakdown from doing that type of manual labor? And then what? But this was a business and that was how it was done. With horses, no less! Many of the basements and walls of homes and buildings in today's Belvidere came from hand-cutting blocks of stone from the earth and shaping them into useful sizes to be used for construction during this pre-mechanical time. No doubt the basement walls of the building where this newspaper operates, and most, if not all, of the buildings in the older business district of Belvidere came from this quarry.

Steam power or internal combustion engines were just around the corner in this 1890's picture of F. I. Hall's stone quarry south of Belvidere on Stone Quarry Road. It is written on the back of this photograph that the quarry was perfect for construction, because the nature of the rock was such that it could be cut easily into flat slabs and delivered to construction sites where it was processed into smaller, custom, construction-size blocks.

This was F. I. Hall's quarry in Flora Township. At the time of this photograph, F. I. Hall's son-in-law, Fred Marritt managed the quarry. It is not known if Marritt was in the picture, but one might assume so, because a woman and child appear on the lower left posing for the picture, the women being perhaps F. I. Hall's daughter and granddaughter. This while three men to the right of the woman and child proudly hold their pick and mauls in the air over their heads as if celebrating the work they do. F. I. Hall was the son of Homer, and F. I. Hall had two sons, Fred and Mark. Perhaps they did not find the work of mining interesting or were too small to work the mine. Perhaps the Hall's were farmers of the land upon which this quarry was discovered.

It looks as if the stone was just taken gradually from the side of the hill, originally exposed by an out-cropping, creating a 70 foot cliff above. A team of horses with a ton or more of bulk stone would pull the wagons up a pathway to the top and to the customer's construction site. An inventory of pre-cut stone stacks up in the background of this photo, begs the questions: how did they get stacked, and how do they get taken down when needed.

The stone here is what is classified in The Past and Present of Boone County, Illinois (1877) as Cincinnati Shale and said to be primarily used for smaller structures because of its softness and adequate strength. It was said by a geological surveyor, Professor Worthen, a geologist in the 1870's, that the primary source of small structure building material in Boone County was located south of Belvidere. Being a bit softer than the Galena stone (IL) and not having much lead content, it was ideal for shaping into construction material: "for flagging stone they can be quarried of any desired shape." Large slabs could be wedged, and crow-barred with pick and maul from this deposit with relative ease as can be seen above.

Galena stone was shipped in by railroad for heavier structures like churches, government buildings and railroad trestles built in Boone County. The professor speculated that north of Belvidere, a harder rock is known to exist, but difficult--and therefore expensive--to mine. It is interesting to note that the professor did a comprehensive evaluation of the whole of Boone County at that time. The professor based much of his findings on the color of the standing water in marshy areas below a hill when an outcropping of the underlying quaternary system was not evident. While most of Boone County has shale formations, most are too deep to be mined. When exposed by streams and rivers, the material is more likely to be sand and gravel.

The Boone County Journal would like to thank the Boone County Historical Museum for the use of this photograph and The Past and Present Boone County, Illinois (1877) H. F. Kett & Co, Chicago.

First USA Female Olympic Champion From Illinois

But Chicago's Margaret Abbott Never Knew It
by Tom Emery

She broke barriers in an era when few noticed. And she went to her grave never knowing that she was an Olympic champion.

Margaret Abbott was the first American woman to win an Olympic event, capturing first place in women's golf at the second of the modern Games, in Paris in 1900. Incredibly, she thought she was competing in a local amateur event, and not in the Olympics.

The scenario may be attributed to the incompetence of the organizers, as the Paris Games were a resounding failure. In addition, the traditional medals for the top three Olympic finishers – gold, silver, and bronze – were not awarded until the next Games, in St. Louis in 1904.

Dr. Paula Welch, professor emerita in Health and Human Performance at the University of Florida, has extensively researched and written on Abbott's life. She notes that many of the winners at Paris were presented with works of art, not medals.

"At the first modern Olympics, in Athens in 1896, a few medals were given," said Welch, who has also studied Olympic history. "But I'm not aware of any medals at Paris."

Like many women golfers of her era, Abbott came from a privileged background. Born in Calcutta on June 15, 1878, she lived in Boston before moving to Chicago with her mother, Mary Perkins Ives Abbott, an accomplished author and essayist for the Chicago Tribune.

Mary Abbott rubbed elbows with the cream of Chicago society, including Charles Blair MacDonald, considered by some the father of amateur golf in the United States. MacDonald was the first President and designer of the Chicago Golf Club, the first 18-hole course in America, and introduced Mary and Margaret to the game.

"People who knew Margaret describe her as quiet, kind of shy," commented Welch. "But she was very confident in her golf game. Peers called her a fierce competitor."

In October 1899, the Abbotts journeyed to Paris, where Margaret was to study art under Edgar Degas and Auguste Rodin. The following year, the World Exposition captivated Paris, and the Olympics were relegated to a sideshow. Sprinkled throughout the long run of the Exposition, the Games opened on May 20 and closed on October 28.

The secondary status disheartened the Baron Pierre de Coubertin, the French founder of the modern Games, though he had been pushed out in a power coup with the government. The ignominious exit may have been a blessing in disguise for Abbott.

"de Coubertin was clear in his disapproval of female competitors," remarked Welch. "Once he was gone, it opened the door for some women to compete. But the organizers hadn't done anything like the Games before, and really didn't know how, which caused some of the problems."

Thanks largely to de Coubertin, no female athletes were permitted to compete in the 1896 Games at Athens. Of the 1,225 athletes at the 1900 version, only nineteen were women. Golf was one of the debut sports in Paris, and the competition was held at Compiègne Golf Club, thirty miles north of the city.

Ten women from two nations – the United States and France – showed up for the nine-hole tournament on October 3. Abbott's future husband, political satirist and humorist Finley Peter Dunne, later said that the other players "apparently misunderstood the nature of the game scheduled for the day and turned up to play in high heels and tight skirts."

But organizers did not bother to explain the event they were playing in. Believing the outing to be some sort of local amateur event, Abbott carded a nine-hole total of 47 to win by two strokes over fellow American Pauline Whittier, a descendant of poet John Greenleaf Whittier who was studying in Switzerland at the time.

In third place with a 53 was another American, Daria Huger Pratt, who was on vacation in France that fall. Soon after the Olympics, she divorced her husband and married a Serbian prince.

Tying for seventh, eighteen strokes off the pace, was Abbott's mother, Mary. It the only time in Olympic history that a mother and daughter competed in the same event.

"Accounts in world newspapers indicate fairly good crowds saw that event," said Welch. "Some of the spectators were in so close that the golfers had to alter their shots."

For her victory, Margaret received a commemorative porcelain bowl, trimmed in gold. She also won the French championship around that time, but never was aware that she was an Olympic champion at any time in her life.

Two years later, she married Dunne. She died in Greenwich, Conn. five days short of her seventy-seventh birthday in 1955.

"In later years, she told family and friends that she thought the competition was more important than the French championship," said Welch. "But she never knew she had won an Olympic event."

Neither did her children. "I spent ten years – not every day, of course – tracking down her golf and Olympic involvement, and searching for her relatives," said Welch. "This was in the days before the Internet."

"One of her sons, Phillip Dunne, was a screenwriter for Twentieth Century Fox," continued Welch. "I asked him, 'do you know what your mother did?' and he was just amazed. He had no idea whatsoever."

Golf returned once more to the Olympics in 1904, but only as a men's event. The sport makes a much ballyhooed-return to the Games this year in Rio. Of course, the athletes in Rio will clearly understand they are in the Olympics – a courtesy never extended to Margaret Abbott.

--In Our Opinion--

Big Car, Small Car-- As Long As It Gets Us There

My late friend from college, Marc Eisdorfer, was fluent in six languages and a master of Finno-Ugric languages. His friends called him "Iceman" as a nod to the German meaning of his surname, not to mention his personality. To finance his studies, Marc drove a bus.

Beyond his linguistic abilities, Marc was an environmental activist par excellence. In addition to being abrasive, he could be effective. To this day, I see a gas guzzler and can hear his colorful and vulgar diatribes, in which only the words "White, Christian, planet and the" were printable. As a former bus driver, Marc was quite generous at offering unsolicited, remedial driving lessons.

Being honest, all of us have to admit that Marc had a point. American automobiles have been a leading source of air pollution for over a century. In addition to the tailpipe, refineries have spewed toxic filth for generations. Miles-per-gallon has been regarded as a topic for sissies, and while lip-service has been paid to fuel economy, the internal combustion engine is as much a dinosaur as the fuel it consumes.

For many years, Europeans, Japanese and others have looked at North Americans with contempt for the large size of our vehicles. Conversely, we listen to soccer moms whine that its "not safe" to be in anything smaller than a 3-ton, armored truck. The auto industry prefers the large vehicles, because it means more margin for them, and I think we all suspect Exxon would rather sell more gallons of gasoline than fewer.

Fifty years after Marc's ranting, it looks like we are about to reach a better place:

• While the US car fleet burns a disappointing amount of gasoline every day, progress is clearly on the horizon. While we were critical of the current state of the Chevy Bolt last week, it clearly is a step toward a cleaner future. Mercedes, Nissan, Tesla, BMW, Volvo, General Motors and others have made great strides in the switch to electric propulsion. Volvo even forecasts that it will be internal combustion-free by the 2022 model year.

• Smarter, better designed, safer roads like the Interstate 90 Tollway mean less energy is consumed and the ride between Rockford and Chicago is safer, with fewer fatalities and injuries. It means less stress and improvements to the world's productivity.

• The cars that were on offer at the Chicago Auto Show illustrate that the self-driving car has arrived. In a few years, the Marc Eisdorfers of the world will be able to retire as part-time driving instructors. Careless, human error will be less frequent and we should see a substantial reduction in the costs of insurance and collision repair.

In this new world, with electrical energy presumably provided by renewable fuel, a large SUV won't be regarded as a gas guzzler. There may be other considerations regarding vehicle size, but we hope that quality will replace quantity as the driver. In the future, if Americans want to drive tanks and Italians want to drive matchboxes, so be it.

Hats off to the many engineers who are making this world possible.

I miss Marc Eisdorfer. I want to take him for a ride in that Beemer i8 Roadster we discussed last week. He'd probably still complain that we were polluting the planet, but I think even he'd have to admit that we've finally made some progress and might be entitled to a least a little redemption.

Good Work If You Can Find It

By Scott Reeder

SPRINGFIELD – Imagine interviewing for a job and getting offered a starting salary of $340,000 and then demanding that your new employer create positions for your adult daughter and her husband.

Arrogant? You bet.

And you would have to question the wisdom of any employer who would give in to such a demand.

Well, folks, guess who is footing the bill for this fellow's salary and those of his daughter and son-law? Illinois taxpayers and the students paying tuition at Southern Illinois University.

And at the same meeting, last year, that Chancellor Carlo Montemagno was hired, SIU's board voted to cut $26 million from the school's budget and examine eliminating seven degree programs.

Two weeks after the board voted to make those cuts and hire her Dad, Melissa Germain signed her new contract for $52,000 to promote theater at SIU.

I can't really say how well she does her job, but in the last several days plenty of drama has come to campus – after SIU's student newspaper The Daily Egyptian uncovered her sweet new gig and that of her husband who makes $45 an hour helping an interim vice chancellor.

The most qualified people are supposed to be hired for open university and state jobs. But job qualifications in Illinois often are relative – they depend on who your relatives are.

The Daily Egyptian, reported that the university hired the Germain for positions that had been created for them and that were never advertised to the public.

The university's internal ethics office has now referred the matter to the state inspector general.

I couldn't help but wonder what our governor thought of this situation. You know, our governor, Bruce Rauner, the fellow ran for office on a platform of fiscal responsibility and a pledge to "Shake up Springfield."

So, I contacted his office and asked these two questions:

Does the governor believe this is an appropriate action by SIU? If not, what action does he plan?

And here is the response from gubernatorial spokeswoman Rachel Bold: "SIU has opened an ethics investigation. We believe that is appropriate and look forward to the outcome."

Huh?

That's all the man who was elected to shake up Springfield has to say?

Come on, Bruce, you appoint members to the SIU board. You are state's chief executive, if you won't condemn something this bad, are you functioning as a watchdog or a lap dog?

And these sorts of problems aren't unique to SIU.

In December, Northern Illinois University's board gave a $600,000 severance to former President Doug Baker, who quit amid a state investigation accusing him and other administrators of mismanagement with the hiring of consultants.

Raise your hand if you ever received $600,000 for quitting a job. Yeah, me neither.

Have you ever been offered a job and told a potential employer, "Nah, I'll only work for you if you hire a couple of my relatives too?" I didn't think so.

But this is how our state universities are operating. This is the way they are choosing to spend our money.

The NIU and SIU campuses are separated by 365 miles, but their administrators are joined by the same sense of entitlement.

Students may be saddled with debt as tuitions escalate. University staffs cringe as the budget axe falls.

But what are university leaders demanding? More -- for themselves.

Where is the governor? Why isn't he speaking out?

His rival for the GOP nomination, Jeanne Ives calls it a lack of leadership on his part.

So far, he hasn't proven her wrong.

Looking for someone with experience that you can trust?

It can be hard to find the right person. Someone who understands your needs and can deliver.

I've worked with hundreds of families and closely-held businesses, including farms. I understand your situation. I've practiced tax law for over 25 years. I have an advanced tax law degree. I've worked for a big four accounting firm, been on the staff of a major tax publisher and served as the tax research director for a major consulting company.

My overhead is low, and my rates are competitive and reasonable. Most of all, returns are prepared in the privacy of an attorney's office, with the confidentiality that only an attorney can provide. No fishbowl atmosphere, flimsy partitions, overheard conversations or prying eyes. Hours are strictly by appointment, so you won't be kept waiting.

If this sounds like what you need, please call me for an appointment.
