Hard Rock Casino Breaks Ground at Permanent Location in Rockford

by Mars Rinaldi

After months of waiting and speculation, the earth-movers are finally rockin' and rolling at the site of the much-anticipated Hard Rock Casino Rockford. The groundbreaking event was held on September 28th at the casino's permanent location, and brought together representatives from Hard Rock International, community leaders, and Rock & Roll Hall of Famer and Rockford native, Rick Nielsen. The ceremonial groundbreaking was emceed by Captain Jack from 96.7 the Eagle, and featured comments from Rockford Mayor Tom MacnamaraMcNamara and Hard Rock International Chief Operating Officer Jon Lucas.

"From the moment we've stepped foot in Rockford, the support we've received has been overwhelming," said Jon Lucas. "The community has truly embraced us, and we are so grateful. Today's event is a great step forward but there is so much more to come." Rick Nielsen set an enthusiastic tone for the event with his trademark humor, saying, "I have called Rockford my home for my entire life and I'm so thrilled to see Hard Rock install a little piece of rock n' roll history in my backyard." He added, "There is a lot to look forward to, and I'm sure I can find a guitar or three to display once the casino is up and running."

According to a press release, the construction of the 180,000 square foot casino, dining, and entertainment complex will be managed by Rockford-based Ringland- Johnson Construction, and is expected to create 1,200 construction-specific jobs. The finished project is estimated to bring another 1,000 full-time and part-time jobs.

Since the opening of The Rockford Casino a Hard Rock Opening Act a year ago, Hard Rock International has already made charitable contributions of given $50,000 to the Rockford community, and has pledged another $150,000 per year for 10 years to the Rockford Park District to expand their programs. In addition, a percentage of the profits of the Hard Rock Casino will go to Winnebago County, Rockford, Loves Park and Machesney Park, which as of August has amounted to 1.3 million dollars from the smaller casino. Mayor Tom MacnamaraMcNamara said "The partnership between Rockford resident and rock star in the band Cheap Trick, Rick Nielsen, and Rockford Mayor Tom MacnamaraMcNamara schmoozing the invited-only guests at the groundbreaking event.

Rockford and Hard Rock is more than just another business coming to town;, it's an investment in our community. The new casino will make Rockford a destination for visitors who will shop in our stores, eat at our restaurants and stay in our hotels, all while helping to create thousands of jobs for our residents and making a significant positive impact on our community."

After the ceremonial first shovel of dirt was moved by Rick Nielsen, a contingent of earth movers began rolling on the site while champagne was served to attending guests. Hard Rock Casnio Rockford is slated to open in November of 2023.

Governor Forum: Pritzker Considering SAFE-T Act Changes; Bailey Urges Full Repeal

Associated Press Media Editors host governor candidates in broad-ranging discussion

By Jerry Nowicki Capitol News Illinois

Gov. JB Pritzker is considering changes to the SAFE-T Act criminal justice reform to clarify provisions related to the end of cash bail in Illinois, while his Republican challenger, state Sen. Darren Bailey, continues to push for a full repeal.

The candidates shared their thoughts Friday on those and other issues during a virtual forum organized by the Illinois Associated Press Media Editors. Questioners included representatives of Shaw Media, the Daily Herald in Arlington Heights, the Springfield State Journal-Register and Capitol News Illinois.

Pritzker has frequently stated he believes cash bail must end in favor of a system that prioritizes an accused person's risk of reoffending or fleeing prosecution, and the SAFE-T Act does so. But nearly all the state's prosecutors have warned that the system replacing the current pretrial detention language is too limiting for judges.

Inaccurate claims surrounding the SAFE-T Act have been rampant, with Bailey stating Friday he believed the intent of it was to let people who are being held in lieu of bail out of jail once it takes effect. Nothing in the law says that will happen, although an Illinois Supreme Court task force has encouraged lawmakers to clarify language regarding what happens Jan. 1.

"And so there are proposals that have been made to make clarifications in the law to make sure that people understand very well that, no, this law does not create non-detainable offenses. And that, no, people are not going to be let out of jail on Jan. 1 - that's not what the law does," Pritzker said.

The governor stopped short of endorsing a bill that would make changes to the SAFE-T Act that was filed last week by Champaign Democrat Scott Bennett, a former prosecutor. But he said it contains "simple to understand" clarifying language. Bennett's bill, among other things, would clarify that the end of cash bail applies to those arrested after Jan. 1, 2023.

"I haven't gone through every provision that he has proposed, but I know that Senator Bennett, who was a prosecutor, a Democrat from Champaign and Vermillion counties, is somebody who is very careful in the way he approaches issues like this and I'm always open to working with people who are rational and reasonable in their proposals," he said.

But lawmakers aren't scheduled to return to the Capitol until Nov. 15, a week after Election Day.

Bailey, a farmer from downstate Xenia, said he'd like to see the governor call a special session ahead of the election to consider SAFE-T Act changes. But he hasn't proposed any in bill form, and he said he'd favor a full repeal. He pointed to several endorsements from law enforcement groups.

"So if I were governor right now, and if I were sitting here and people across this state were as concerned as they are about their safety, I'd call a special session right now" Bailey said. "It's an election year, Gov. Pritzker. You've got a perfect opportunity to have a little political ploy here. Call session back in and let's talk and let's come up with solutions."

Bailey's opening remarks focused on public safety, lamenting the volume of shootings in the city of Chicago. He said "law and order's out of control," and he'd bring back "hope" for Illinoisans by addressing it.

"We're going to do that by restoring education," he said. "Our schools have been decimated the last four years. And we're going to do that by allowing men and women to thrive and work and raise their families here in Illinois like they were once able to do and that's no longer the case."

His public safety agenda doesn't include gun regulation. He reiterated that he wants the state Firearm Owners Identification Act repealed, calling the ID cards a money grab.

"Illinois has the most restrictive gun laws in the nation. The problem is those laws aren't being honored and they're not being followed," Bailey said.

Pritzker countered that the FOID law gives Illinois more background check authority than does federal law. He also argued in favor of banning assault-style rifles both statewide and nationally.

"That should not be legal in the state of Illinois. It shouldn't be legal nationally," he said of the rifles. "There's no reason that someone needs an assault weapon. It doesn't have a sporting use. It doesn't have a defense use."

Pritzker criticized Bailey as a "Trump extremist" in his opening remarks while also focusing on his record of paying down state debt, increasing education spending, erasing a bill backlog, raising the minimum wage and protecting abortion rights.

He touted a $1.8 billion tax relief plan that will send direct payments to most Illinoisans, eliminate a state grocery tax for a year, put off a gas tax increase until next year and expand the state's earned income tax credit.

It's a proposal Bailey supported despite voting against the general budget framework every year he has been in office since 2019. He contended that Illinois hasn't had a balanced budget in 30 years, criticizing Pritzker for growing state spending during his term.

Bailey contended the 2019 operating budget was $34 billion, although records from the Commission on Government Forecasting and Accountability show Illinois took in base revenues around $39 billion in Fiscal Year 2019, topping $40 billion with treasurer investments and inter-fund borrowing.

State spending grew to $46.5 billion in the current operating budget, Fiscal Year 2023.

Bailey didn't identify planned budget cuts but repeated his intent to install a new budgeting method to give more scrutiny to year-over-year spending.

"My administration will enact a zero-based budget where we will place knowledgeable, honorable, hardworking men and women as agency heads and they will begin to go to work with the zero-based budget and they will account for every dollar that's going to be spent," Bailey said.

Bailey, who has the endorsements of the state's anti-abortion groups, has been one of Illinois' staunchest anti-abortion lawmakers. But he didn't answer whether he'd sign a ban on the procedure.

"Illinois has the most permissive abortion rights in the nation," he said. "Women's rights are well protected here. Nothing's changing. I couldn't change them on my own if I wanted to. Gov. Pritzker stays up at night and tries to think of new rights."

He criticized a law repealing a requirement that parents of minors seeking an abortion be notified and accused Pritzker of fearmongering before pivoting back to public safety.

Pritzker said lawmakers continue to have working group discussions as to what new laws can be implemented to protect those rights, with some guidance from him.

"I'm focused and dedicated on preserving a woman's right to choose and making sure that Illinois is a safe haven for people who seek to exercise what I think are basic constitutional rights over their own bodies," he said.

Bailey, who has passed two bills in the General Assembly since 2019, blamed that on the partisan makeup of the General Assembly and said as governor "communication and cooperation will be the key to my administration." He also said Illinois has too many bills being filed and too many laws.

Pritzker countered by pointing to the bipartisan accomplishments of his administration, including his first budget, the legalization of recreational marijuana and a $45 billion infrastructure plan that funded road, bridge, building and other projects across the state. It did so in part by doubling the motor fuel tax and expanding gambling.

He also cited the infrastructure bill when asked how his administration prioritizes downstate communities. Bailey, he pointed out, voted against that plan. Pritzker specifically mentioned Shawneetown and Cairo port projects and a casino at the Walker's Bluff resort, which he said will be major employers in southern Illinois.

Bailey, who has frequently referred to Chicago as a hellhole, said he considers himself a voice for "the rest of Illinois," criticizing "one-size-fits-all" legislation, citing the Climate and Equitable Jobs Act which he said was detrimental to downstate coal and gas plants, as well as consumer energy bills.

Pritzker defended CEJA as a measure allowing the state to put new renewable energy on the grid while keeping nuclear plants open and at least partially addressing climate change, which has driven more frequent severe flooding events and been detrimental to downstate farmers.

Democrat, Republican Each Tout Depth of Experience, Eye 'Modernization'

By Jerry Nowicki Capitol News Illinois

For the first time since 1998, the secretary of state seat in Illinois will be an open one in the general election.

The candidates to fill it are former state treasurer and Chicago Democrat Alexi Giannoulias, and longtime state Rep. Dan Brady, a deputy House minority leader from Bloomington.

Giannoulias is seeking to reenter the statewide political landscape for the first time since his 2010 loss in the race for U.S. Senate to Republican Mark Kirk by about 59,000 votes. Brady has served in the House since 2001 after spending two terms as McLean County coroner from 1992 until 2000, and he is a partner at a Bloomington funeral home.

They're vying to replace outgoing Secretary of State Jesse White, who has held the position since 1999 and is known for consistently outperforming the rest of the Democratic statewide field throughout his time in office. Both men spoke highly of White, who endorsed fellow Democrat Giannoulias but has also spoken highly of Brady.

Brady, meanwhile, was recently endorsed by Republican Jim Edgar, former governor and secretary of state.

The two candidates each participated in recent interviews organized by the Illinois Associated Press Media Editors, with questions posed by representatives of the State Journal-Register and Capitol News Illinois.

Both candidates have a long list of policies they'd like to implement if elected, with a heavy focus on modernizing the office and putting many of its functions online.

Giannoulias said he'd look to create a mobile app, and by driving many services online he'd cut down foot traffic at facilities "anywhere from 50 to 70 percent." That would allow the office to retrain some driver services employees to serve as "office advocates" to help individuals through the system, especially seniors and individuals with disabilities.

"People are paying a time tax in Illinois. It takes too long for them to access government services," Giannoulias said.

He'd also look to implement a "skip-the-line" program to allow driver services visitors to pre-register, arrive at a specified time and move to the front of the line. He'd also explore digital IDs and driver licenses, creating kiosks at driver facilities, and creating pop-up offices at libraries and community colleges. He'd also consider implementing online vision tests if it's proven it can be done safely.

Brady has his own long list of initiatives, including moving things online, using libraries and community colleges as satellite sites, maximizing staff training and capabilities, and making the SOS website more user friendly.

One focus has been an electronic lien and title transfer program that's been written into state law for years but has languished without proper implementation. It's something Giannoulias wants to implement as well.

"We're talking about streamlining things that can be done within hours ... versus, as I said, the several weeks to months that's taking right now," Brady said, later adding, "What we're missing here is someone who's going to take the bull by the horns and get the project done."

Brady said he'd also look to fully staff driver services facilities, something he said hasn't been done because of current "internal decisions."

"I would change that by being secretary of state by ... prioritizing those service facilities and looking to where we have other staff that can be out in the facilities interacting, responding, serving the general public," he said.

He'd prioritize staffing facilities with the heaviest traffic. The plan also includes "cross-training" driver and vehicle service staff to reduce wait times.

The office itself has more than 4,000 employees and touches many aspects of state government beyond driver services, including management of the Capitol Complex in Springfield, maintaining a police force, policing securities fraud, registering lobbyists and serving as the state librarian.

Brady said some of the best ideas for improving operations are likely to come from those employees.

With similar focuses of modernizing the office and reducing wait times, each candidate touted their own experiences as the reason they're best fit for the office.

"I'm running for this office not because I want to use it as a springboard to another political office. I'm running because I've always been and will continue to be a public servant," Brady said.

Brady said he's worked across the aisle on budgets and other issues and worked with Secretary White to address distracted driving and implement senior driver education programs. His private-sector funeral home experience and time as McLean County coroner also buoy his credentials, he said.

Giannoulias, meanwhile, says his time as state treasurer will greatly benefit him as he once again seeks statewide office. So will his time in business, he said.

"I will tell you having run a statewide office before, I think that's experience that is important, that is relevant. It's the management of a large office, and modernization will be at the forefront of everything we do in that office," he said.

As accomplishments as treasurer, he cited implementation of a low-interest loan program for first-time home buyers and later defended his management of the Bright Start college savings program for which he received scrutiny in his 2010 Senate campaign. While one fund lost money, he said, he improved the fee structures for the college savings program and increased enrollment.

Since he left office, Giannoulis was appointed by Gov. Pat Quinn as chair of the Illinois Community College Board and he spent time on the Illinois Board of Higher Education, the Chicago Public Library Board and various nonprofit boards.

From 2012 until 2018 he was a “private wealth manager” at Bank of New York Mellon, a job that he said was essentially “to bring in new business.” He said his clients were “families and individuals.”

His LinkedIn account also lists him as CEO of Annoula Ventures, which he described as a private investment vehicle.

“I started a little fund where we invest in tech startups and other businesses,” he said, noting he invested in Cameo, an online company that allows celebrities to sell brief video messages.

Now, he said, he’s an investor, rather than an owner and maintains only passive investments, including shares of Cameo Inc. and 14 other entities in which he has an interest, including family trusts. His statement of economic interest also notes investments in cryptocurrency and a recent bitcoin sale.

“Even though these are just passive investments, I will – the first thing I’d do, even during the transition period, get a legal opinion, make sure the inspector general takes a look at whatever I have,” he said, noting he would divest anything that is determined to raise a red flag.

Brady’s statement of economic interest notes only his income as state representative and his partnership in the Kibler-Brady-Ruestman Memorial Home in Bloomington.

While the two candidates shared a modernization focus, they diverged on the issue of license fee reductions. Brady has proposed cutting license registration fees by $50 temporarily due to rising inflation, but he had not yet filed a bill to do so.

He was among the lawmakers who voted on bipartisan lines to raise license fees in 2019 to help fund a $45 billion capital infrastructure plan. Of the $50 increase, $49 was to go to the road fund to be spent on transportation infrastructure.

He suggested some administrative changes that could be enacted to mitigate the effect on the secretary of state’s office if fees are lowered, but he didn’t say how he’d make up for reductions in the road fund.

Giannoulis, meanwhile, called it “irresponsible budgeting,” to suspend fees regardless of a person’s income without identifying funding alternatives. But he said he would consider a program that would cut fees for lower-income individuals, provided there is a budget workaround.

Another point of difference was that Giannoulis is stumping for a law that would prohibit the use of Illinois’ automatic license plate reader cameras to track individuals coming to the state for abortion services. That’s not a practice expressly allowed in state law regulating the cameras, although Giannoulis said it’s also not expressly prohibited.

Brady said he didn’t think it’s a necessary move and he contended his opponent was spending too much time on social issues.

Giannoulis countered that voters deserve to know where a candidate stands on such issues.

Brady has acknowledged he’s voted for Donald Trump for president but said he was a John Kasich supporter in a previous primary. He said he supports the Republican ticket in Illinois in general and believes Joe Biden was rightly elected president. Otherwise, he says, voters talk to him about the issues of the office – not about GOP gubernatorial candidate Darren Bailey and Trump.

Comptroller’s Race: Mendoza Touts State’s Fiscal Progress; Teresi Focuses on Recent Corruption

Voters to decide who should be state’s chief fiscal officer

By Peter Hancock Capitol News Illinois

When former Gov. Bruce Rauner and the Democratic-controlled General Assembly spent more than two years at an impasse in negotiating a state budget from mid-2015 into 2017, the office of Illinois comptroller was thrust onto center stage.

As the state’s chief fiscal officer, the comptroller is often referred to as manager of the state’s checkbook. But without an approved budget, the comptroller had no legal authority to write checks on state funds, leaving vendors, contractors, health care providers and many others in a lurch.

More than 500 days into that impasse, there was a special election for comptroller. The last elected person to hold that job, Judy Baar Topinka, died unexpectedly just a few weeks after winning reelection in 2014.

Rauner, a Republican who had just been elected himself, appointed Leslie Munger, a business executive, to fill the seat until another election could be held to serve out the remaining two years on Topinka’s term. And in that election, Chicago City Clerk and former state Rep. Susana Mendoza, a Democrat, prevailed by 5 percentage points.

“And so I probably signed up for the toughest job in government at that time,” she said during a podcast interview with Capitol News Illinois. “You’ll recall, we basically had, I wouldn’t say an absentee governor, but we had a governor who was actively destroying the state’s finances and decimating the state’s social safety network.”

Mendoza was reelected to a full four-year term in 2018 and is now seeking another term, this time facing McHenry County Auditor Shannon Teresi in the Nov. 8 general election.

“I am running because Illinois is the most corrupt, the most fiscally mismanaged, highest taxed, highest foreclosure rate in the nation,” Teresi said in a separate interview. “And I am running because I am a (certified public accountant), I am a certified fraud examiner, I’m a certified internal auditor with a proven track record and financial leadership experience the state has never had before in its history of the comptroller’s position.”

Each candidate participated in interviews with Capitol News Illinois for the Capitol Cast podcast as part of a series of pre-election interviews conducted by the news organization. You can find the full interviews here or on most podcast apps.

The budget impasse ended up lasting just over two years, from July 2015 to August 2017. During that time, the state’s backlog of past-due bills reached a high of $16.7 billion while the state’s credit rating fell to just one notch above “junk” status.

Mendoza cites paying down that backlog as her biggest accomplishment in office. Today, she said, vendors are being paid usually within 10 days and the state is operating on a regular “accounts payable” cycle.

In addition, each of the three major credit rating agencies has raised the state’s rating by two notches, meaning it is still the lowest of any state in the nation but moving in a positive direction.

“That is nothing short of remarkable,” Mendoza said. “And I’m very proud that the people of Illinois trusted me not just once, but twice by electing me twice to this position.”

Teresi, however, counters that the credit upgrades and paying down past-due bills was more the result of federal pandemic relief money that was pumped into Illinois.

“(Gov. JB) Pritzker right now is campaigning on the bond rating when we have the worst bond rating in the nation,” she said. “The state has received over 185 billion collectively to not just the state, but all the agencies within the state. And this has bolstered the economy. And they are trying to take credit for it.”

The $185 billion figure she cites includes all pandemic relief combined, including stimulus checks to individuals, aid to local governments and schools, Paycheck Protection Program loans to businesses, and various kinds of enhanced unemployment benefits for laid-off workers.

According to state records, the state itself received about $8.1 billion, which Mendoza and the Pritzker administration say was all used for one-time expenses related to the pandemic. The other pandemic-related revenues, meanwhile, have increased base revenues across the U.S. in the two most recent fiscal years.

Mendoza also cites as one of her early accomplishments the passage of the 2017 Debt Transparency Act, which lawmakers approved over Rauner’s veto. It required state agencies to report monthly the volume of bills they were holding but had not yet sent to the comptroller’s office for payment. It also required agencies to report bills that were more than 90 days past due and thus subject to late-payment penalties of 1 percent per month.

“And now agencies are disincentivized from holding onto those bills for a long time, because they look like they’re being irresponsible,” she said. “And so now you’ll actually see that it’s rare to find an agency holding on to a bill for longer than, let’s say 60 days, because we’ll know that they’re doing that.”

Lawmakers took other actions during that time to address the bill backlog. In 2017, when the backlog hit its peak, they authorized issuing $6 billion in bonds, taking the total backlog down to about $9.1 billion. And in 2018, they authorized a new Vendor Payment Program that allowed third-party investors to purchase unpaid bills that were owed to vendors and then collect the interest when the state eventually paid the bill.

In 2020, as the state was making progress paying down the backlog, some investors who took part in the program complained vocally when Mendoza made a decision to pay the principal owed on the bills, but not the interest penalties. A spokesman in her office said in an email that the state still owes a little more than $43 million in late-payment interest.

Mendoza said she'd like to see a phase-out of that program as the state's finances stabilize.

"Hopefully, we will never ever be in a situation where we need to rely on these-third party lenders, because that's what those investment companies are," she said. "They made a huge amount of profit on the state's dysfunction."

Teresi earned a master's degree in accounting from Northern Illinois University and began her career as an associate at the accounting firm Price-waterhouseCoopers in 2007. She joined McHenry County government in 2016 as a financial reporting manager and was elected as county auditor in 2018.

This year, she ran unopposed in the primary as part of a slate of candidates endorsed by GOP megadonor Ken Griffin. She has focused much of her campaign on the theme of rooting out corruption in state government.

"There hasn't been a top-down approach at addressing corruption on the state level, and fraud, waste and abuse," she said.

As comptroller she said she'd launch a statewide initiative addressing corruption, noting, "the largest amount of corruption and fraud is found based on tips."

"And so, as your next comptroller, I will be working with the inspector general's office and promoting the hotline statewide tasking every taxpayer, business, vendor that works with the state government to report fraud, waste and abuse."

Teresi said she was excited about the GOP ticket, including gubernatorial candidate Darren Bailey, a state senator who has made several controversial statements such as calling Chicago a "hellhole" and comparing abortion in the United States to the Holocaust.

"What we see is a movement with Darren Bailey's race and the Republican Party as a whole," she said, later adding, "I think there's a lot of enthusiasm. ... I'm happy to run with Darren Bailey and all of the other statewide candidates."

Local Gold Star Families Honored by Visiting Riders

by Mars Rinaldi

Cyclists participating in the Gold Star Mission 500 stopped in Belvidere on September 23rd on the second-to-last day of their journey. Around 30 riders made the five-day journey, which began in Springfield and ended at Great Lakes Naval Station. The Gold Star Mission 500 is an annual ride meant to commemorate the lives of Illinois service members who made the ultimate sacrifice in service to their country. Each rider wears a cycling jersey that says "Riding for All Illinois Fallen Service Members." At every stop along the way, volunteers set up signs with the photos and names of local service members who died in combat. During their break, the riders walk by the signs to remember and honor the fallen. The group consisted of both American and Polish participants there to pay tribute, as American and Polish forces have trained and fought side-by-side with the Illinois National Guard. Next year will mark 30 years of the State Partnership Program with Poland.

Local Gold Star families were invited by the Gold Star Mission and honored during a brief, but poignant ceremony. Mrs. Ann Castro was present, honoring her brother, PFC Jesse Hernandez, who died on Feb. 25th, 1944, while serving in Germany. During the presentation, a coordinator of the ride brought Mrs. Hernandez up to share a letter she wrote recalling the moment she learned her brother had been killed, and expressed her heartfelt thanks to all those who gave their lives so that "we can live under liberty." The riders stood and gave her a standing ovation. Also in attendance was Julie DiGiovanni, mother of Sgt. Blake W. Evans who was killed in Iraq on May 25th, 2008. Riders paused to rise and hold a moment of silence for these brave soldiers. The Gold Star Mission coordinators then presented VFW Post 1461 with a plaque thanking them for their support of the Mission.

As the meal and break ended, all of the participants stood for the "War Cry," which is given at each stop. The War Cry is the slogan of the Gold Star Mission, and one person leads by calling "Always Remember," and the riders reply with a thunderous "Never Forget." The cry is repeated three times in English and in Polish, and the enthusiasm with which this happens is an absolute testament to the commitment of the riders to the Gold Star Mission.

The whole stop lasted only about 30 minutes, and riders were soon gearing back up to make their way to Marengo for two more legs before they would stop for the night. VFW Post Quartermaster and Adjutant Robert Bland said that Post 1461 "was honored to be able to provide support" to the Gold Star Mission 500 riders.
