New Data Centers Could Create More Than 120k Illinois Jobs, Though Mostly Temporary

Energy, environmental advocates remain skeptical data centers will provide significant, lasting benefits

Ben Szalinski & Maggie Dougherty
Capitol News Illinois

A new study predicts data centers expected to be built in Illinois over the next decade would create thousands of jobs and millions of dollars in new property tax revenue.

But many are skeptical the touted benefits will live up to their promises or outweigh the environmental and energy burdens.

The study by the Illinois Economic Policy Institute projected that $57 billion worth of new data center investments through 2035 will create 121,000 jobs. Most of those would be temporary construction and other jobs throughout the economy, with just 2,800 of them direct, permanent positions.

Read the report

After lawmakers failed to pass data center regulations in the spring session and Gov. JB Pritzker paused the state's data center tax incentive program, a comprehensive study was needed to help guide policymakers on how to address residents' concerns, according to Frank Manzo, an economist at ILEPI, a labor-backed research organization that "promotes thoughtful economic growth for businesses and working families."

"There's currently a trust deficit amongst the public, and Illinois can ensure responsible development of data centers to address that deficit, and we've come up with possible ways to do that," Manzo said.

Recognizing the growing public distrust of data centers and concerns over their heavy water and energy consumption, the report put forth 10 policy proposals that it says could protect residents while preserving the state's competitive position to attract data center development. Many were in line with a policy plan that stalled in Springfield in the spring, aiming to put guardrails on an industry while still promoting economic development.

"A moratorium sends investment to neighboring states," Manzo said, adding that clear standards and guardrails "give developers certainty and can protect ratepayers."

Candidates Vie to Be State's First New Comptroller in a Decade

Margaret Croke, Bryan Drew share different visions for office's transparency, oversight

Brenden Moore & Ben Szalinski
Capitol News Illinois

In January, there will be a new person writing the state's checks.

Democrat Margaret Croke, a state representative from Chicago, and Republican Bryan Drew, an attorney from Benton, are competing to succeed incumbent Comptroller Susana Mendoza, a Chicago Democrat who's held the job since late 2016 but is forgoing a reelection bid to focus on a second campaign for mayor of the nation's third-largest city.

"I'm walking into a really well-run office if I'm lucky enough to win in November, and I get to build on those things, and that's an opportunity that I'm excited for, and that I really appreciate her kind of setting me up for success," Croke told Capitol News Illinois in an interview earlier this month.

Croke has six years of legislative experience under her belt, which has included work on various financial issues and processes within state government. Before getting elected in 2020, she held leadership positions in the Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity and was on Gov. JB Pritzker's 2018 campaign staff.

Drew has been a personal injury and civil litigation attorney in southern Illinois for more than 25 years. He's also a small business owner. He's served for eight years as an elected trustee of the Rend Lake Community College Board, including two has its chairman. And in 2024, he finished second in the Republican primary for a circuit court judgeship.

Though limited in his experience in state government and finance, Drew said owning a cafe with his wife has exposed him to the impact of high taxes on small businesses. He said he would use the "bully pulpit" of the office to act as a watchdog for taxpayers.

"If the comptroller's office really is a watchdog for the taxpayers, then I think it is an essential office because it really is the one independent place that the taxpayers can go to find out where their money's going," Drew said.

Pritzker Establishes AI Cabinet Amid Calls For Greater Regulation

Advisory group will explore new policies, ways to protect residents from harm

Ben Szalinski Capitol News Illinois

Gov. JB Pritzker is setting up a new group within state government to explore more regulations for artificial intelligence as calls grow across the country for new restrictions.

Pritzker signed an executive order on Tuesday to establish an AI Cabinet made up of experts and representatives from several state agencies. The unpaid group, which will formulate policy proposals through 2027, will analyze and assess "the various risks posed by AI to the safety of Illinois residents and the critical infrastructure residents rely on."

It's the latest move by Illinois to tackle state-focused AI regulation as the federal government continues to take a hands-off approach, even as industry insiders sound the alarm on the technology's capabilities.

A former Anthropic and OpenAI researcher alleged in an explosive social media post earlier this month that AI companies are building a tool that could become "out of control" and pose a threat to human existence by 2030.

"Artificial Intelligence has enormous potential to transform our everyday lives, but when experts and industry leaders sound the alarm bell, urge us to slow down, and ask for guardrails, we should listen," Pritzker said in a statement.

The cabinet will formulate policies and procedures to protect Illinois residents and public assets like water systems, education and information systems from threats posed by AI. It will also analyze "emerging AI incidents and share lessons learned" from them.

The advisory group will also make policy recommendations on risk management and assess the feasibility, timeframe and any other challenges for implementing them.

The cabinet will consider regulations tying data center incentives or operational approval to a company's ability to meet safety, accountability and transparency standards. It will also look into addressing strain on the energy grid from data centers, evaluating how state procurement and contracting practices can incorporate AI safety and accountability measures, and assessing if existing legal options are good enough to hold AI companies that cause harm accountable.

Mark Larson, formerly of Belvidere, passed away September 24, 2026, in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

As a child, he had the opportunity to live near Piscasaw Creek in rural Boone County, enjoying his summer days playing and swimming with his friend, Kim Engelson. He attended Lincoln and Washington Schools and graduated in three years from Belvidere High School.

Inspired by his Belvidere art teacher, Kit Schidenhelm, Mark launched a successful creative career in Washington, DC as an event planner. His business began as a partnership with his cousin, Karen Dowd. Among his clients were Exxon Mobil, Mercedes-Benz, Girl Scouts of America, and the Democratic Party.

Post-911, Mark retained several clients and moved to the Island of Vieques off the eastern coast of Puerto Rico, working remotely. Ten years ago, he retired to Albuquerque.

Mark Leonard Larson was born November 5th, 1957, in Rockford. He was the son of David L. Larson and Idell K. Offenheiser-Larson of Belvidere. Mark is preceded in death by his parents, aunts, uncles, and cousin, Ron Robinson. Mark is survived by his life partner of 28 years, Joe Van Zandt; brother, David C. Larson; cousins Marsha Fay, Debbie Fay, Brian Fay, John Robinson, Paul Robinson, John Brown, Terri Brown, Don Brown, and his cousin and former business partner, Karen Dowd.

Illinois lawmakers have already taken steps to regulate AI.

Pritzker signed Senate Bill 315 in July, also known as the Artificial Intelligence Safety Measures Act, which increases transparency and accountability requirements for the largest artificial intelligence models — those that generate more than $500 million in annual revenue and are trained using massive computing power. It establishes new reporting standards for the possibility that the AI model could be used for large-scale harm, such as by helping create a chemical, biological or nuclear weapon or committing cyber-attacks.

It also made Illinois the first state to require annual audits of AI. The law takes effect in 2028.

Since the AI researcher came forward earlier this month, Pritzker has been aggressively calling on Congress to step in.

“It should be among the top priorities, but don’t misunderstand, it is dangerous and it’s dangerous on the level of nuclear weapons,” Pritzker said on ABC’s Sunday morning news show. “So that’s why it needs to be an international endeavor.

Pritzker has urged Congress to immediately begin holding hearings on AI safety and impose national standards.

As Early Voting Begins, Officials Seek To Reassure Public About Election Security, Integrity

Mail balloting goes forward as normal after Trump's failed attempt to federalize the process

Peter Hancock Capitol News Illinois

With early in-person and mail-in voting now underway in Illinois, state and local election officials insisted Friday that the state's voting system is being run fairly and accurately.

Sangamon County Clerk Don Gray and Illinois State Board of Elections spokesman Matt Dietrich told a Springfield audience not to buy into false reports that the system is vulnerable to widespread fraud or that voter rolls can be hacked or manipulated.

"We can't allow that disinformation to permeate our systems here, or that form of terrorism to erode our greatest beacon of what we do — electing our leaders," Gray said. "I encourage all of you to get involved. Become an election judge. See what it is that we do. See how we operate."

Gray and Dietrich were the featured speakers at a forum sponsored by the Citizens Club of Springfield. It was billed as an effort to address concerns that have been raised in recent years about the integrity and security of elections in the United States.

Much of the recent criticism of the electoral process has come directly from the White House where President Donald Trump has tried to exert more federal control over elections, particularly mail-in voting.

Federal lawsuits

For more than a year, Illinois and at least 29 other states have been embroiled in litigation over the Trump administration's efforts to gain access to the states' complete, unredacted voter registration databases that include sensitive personal information such as dates of birth, driver's license numbers and partial Social Security numbers.

The Trump administration has said it needs the data to determine whether states are properly maintaining their voter rolls, including purging the rolls of non-U.S. citizens and other people ineligible to vote. But Illinois has argued the administration has no statutory authority to demand the data while state law prohibits election officials from releasing it.

"We've won at the trial court level," Dietrich said, referring to a July 31 federal court ruling. "But those cases are going on. There are still five more that are out there. So far, the states have prevailed in 25 of those cases. That's going to go on for a while. I foresee that that will end up at some point before the Supreme Court."

Illinois was also part of a successful multistate lawsuit to block the administration's attempt to put the U.S. Postal Service in charge of regulating the pickup and delivery of mail ballots.

Because the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in the states' favor in that case, Gray said local election authorities throughout Illinois were able to mail out ballots to people who had requested them on Thursday, the official start of early voting in Illinois.

"If the guidelines were upheld, we'd have to reprint all our envelopes," he said. "It would take weeks for us to do that. They'd have to restuff all of the materials to get them in. So the timing was terrible for us to do this."

Election safeguards

Despite Trump's attempts to cast doubt over vote-by-mail systems, Gray said mail balloting has been growing "by leaps and bounds" in recent years and predicted that mail-in votes could account for as much as one-third of all votes cast in the Nov. 3 election.

Gray and Dietrich also tried to put to rest concerns that the state does not properly check the identity of people registering to vote.

Gray said Illinois provides multiple ways for people to register. Many people do it when applying for or renewing their driver's license or state identification card, but they can also do it through an online portal on the State Board of Elections' website or by filling out a paper form that can be delivered to their local election office.

Illinois requires applicants to show two forms of identification, at least one of which must show their current home address. That can include a driver's license, state ID card, bank statement, a residence contract or lease, or a utility bill. The application also asks for the last four digits of the person's Social Security number and their date of birth.

No matter how a person submits their application, Gray said, it eventually gets sent to the local election authority where officials verify all the information provided.

"When it comes back to the election authority, we look up those driver's licenses into a portal of secretary of state to ensure it's active, it's legitimate, it's the person that's presenting themselves and at the address that they request," he said. "We also do the same with the last four digits of your Social Security number with the Social Security Administration. So we're doing a lot of upfront vetting all the time through those means to ensure that you are who you are."

And while Illinois does not require voters to show identification at the polls to cast a ballot, Gray and Dietrich said it would be extremely difficult for anyone to vote under someone else's name.

"You would have to know the voter's name and address for one," Dietrich said. "You'd also have to have a pretty good idea of what their signature is. But if impersonation was happening at any volume, even if it was just a few dozen, eventually the real voter is going to show up in their polling place and try to get their ballot. The election judge will say, 'Well, you already voted. We have this here,' and the legitimate voter is going to say, 'Well, I didn't vote.' That's going to start an investigation."

Dietrich also discussed cybersecurity measures that have been put in place since a highly-publicized attempt in 2016 by Russian agents to hack into the state's voter registration database as part of a broader attempt to interfere in that year's U.S. elections.

In response, he said, Illinois used a $13 million federal grant and state matching funds to hire "cyber navigators" who were deployed across the state to train local election authorities on cyber security.

"Probably the biggest thing that they did in that first year was they put all 108 local election authorities onto the Illinois Century Network, which is the state of Illinois' private internet that state government uses to send data within an intra-agency communication," Dietrich said. "So your voter data is never being put onto the public internet to come to us."

More information about how to vote by mail or cast an early in-person ballot is available from the State Board of Elections or local election authorities.

The Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity estimated that, as of 2025, data centers received an estimated tax break value that exceeded $660 million.

Data centers and property taxes

There are already more than 240 planned or active data centers in Illinois, or 19 per 1 million residents.

The report found that data centers would also supply nearly $300 million in annual property tax revenue once operational, allowing local governments to reduce property taxes for residents by 3-10% if no tax abatements are offered.

Manzo said the impact of a data center on local property taxes would depend on its size, with larger ones eating more of the bill. He said the impact could also be especially strong in more rural and small counties, such as DeKalb.

The report shows that in 2024 while the tech company Meta paid $31 million in property taxes on their new data center in the county, average property taxes in DeKalb County increased by about 2% compared to 6% on average across the state.

“Every local community has to have their own voice and their own will expressed in these,” Robert Bruno, a University of Illinois professor who coauthored the report with ILEPI, said in an interview. “But as a possible source of revenue that could achieve a lot of good, it’s sizeable and it is a pretty reliable collective source of revenue for schools.”

But the city also reduced the property taxes paid on the sprawling Meta data center, lessening what the impact could have been for homeowners, according to Kristan Wong Karinen, a researcher at Good Jobs First, a national policy organization that advocates against corporate subsidies.

“Abating the taxes doesn’t help you at all,” she said, pointing to Illinois’ law limiting how much local governments can raise property taxes in a single year. “It just hurts any kind of gain you could have had from it.”

One of the report’s recommendations was to ban local property tax breaks so data centers help reduce local tax burdens by a greater amount.

Jobs created would be mostly temporary

Most data centers don’t employ many people after they are built. With 2,800 permanent positions expected to be created by the total $57 billion investment, data center developers are collectively spending $20.2 million per permanent job.

“If this were completely private money, it would be a different story,” Anthony Elmo, another Good Jobs First researcher, said. “These taxpayer dollars need to actually incentivize good long-term jobs and they’re not.”

Illinois Economic Policy Institute researchers said many of the jobs created by the data center projects pay well, including six-figure construction jobs. Thirteen projects in 2020 and 2021 created 8,000 construction jobs with wages over $100,000, according to the report.

The report also found data centers would create 41,751 consumer-demand-induced jobs over the next decade throughout the economy. These are jobs that range from local restaurant workers to factory jobs at places that manufacture construction materials.

Elmo questioned whether the growth of data centers will continue to be robust given the public backlash and likelihood they will face more regulations.

But Manzo said the counter argument is that these jobs could go to a different state — something Elmo said could happen anyway as technology progresses.

“As they are able to build their technology and build their ability to run data centers remotely and without permanent positions, how many of those permanent position will go away?” Elmo said.

Energy implications

The report acknowledges that a tradeoff for those job and property tax benefits is the increasing cost of energy driven by power-hungry, always-on data centers. The authors estimate the impact to average residential bills would be around an extra $12 per month, or $150 a year.

The report’s estimate was based on what researchers called a mid-level scenario, in which new data centers would add 6.5 gigawatts of energy demand to Illinois’ grid by 2035 — enough to power millions of homes.

That scenario, researchers said, would increase electric system costs overall by almost 10%. Other projections estimate the impact will be much higher.

Data from PJM, the regional transmission organization that manages energy flows in northeastern Illinois, forecasts that electricity demand from data centers will grow by 10.7 GW by 2035 in ComEd’s territory alone, though all projects are not guaranteed to come online.

The rest of the state is on the MISO grid, which is expected to see peak demand increase by 35% by 2035 across the 15 states in its territory, driven largely by data center development in states like Illinois, Indiana and Michigan.

Analysis conducted by the Natural Resources Defense Council last year predicted that average families in the PJM territory would see prices increase by as much as $70 per month by 2028.

Rising electricity costs don’t just affect residential bills but can also hurt businesses, Citizens Utility Board spokesperson Jim Chilsen said, as consumers have less disposable income.

“One thing that’s horrible for the economy is high electric bills, because when consumers are pouring all their money into escalating electric bills, they don’t have money to use to spark the economy in other places,” he said.

Policy recommendations

Many of the proposed policy recommendations are in line with the POWER Act, a bill that would have made data centers secure their own renewable energy supply and required water-use permits and transparency reporting, among other provisions.

The report also recommended a statewide ban on nondisclosure agreements with developers because they harm trust with the public, who are often left asking questions about data center projects that can’t be answered because of the agreements. The POWER Act would also ban such agreements.

Lawmakers didn’t pass the POWER Act in the spring legislative session, but advocates are optimistic the bill will advance during the fall veto session. Pritzker, who advocates criticized for a lack of engagement on the issue last spring, called on lawmakers to act last week.

The report also proposed limiting the incentives the state gives to data center developers. Researchers suggested raising the investment threshold and number of jobs that a data center creates to qualify for a state tax break, while also reducing the number of years the incentive lasts.

Christine Nannicelli oversees renewable energy policy at the Sierra Club of Illinois, which has advocated for stronger data center regulations. She said Illinois needs to prioritize rigorous standards, not just incentives for companies that choose to bring their own renewable energy and create jobs.

“The rubber hits the road when we talk about, are we incentivizing good behavior or are we going to require good behavior?” Nannicelli said. “This isn’t about offering fluffy tax incentives to do the right thing. We need to really raise the bar for this industry as a whole.”
