Lucky Leroy Beats Reverend Scott by a Nose

By Charles Herbst

Horsing took a new turn at Belvidere this year. Instead of racing on Tuesday and Wednesday with five races each day, all ten races were held on the Boone County Fair's opening day, Tuesday, August 9. Post time remained 12noon. The weather was fair, low humidity, temperatures in the upper 70s, with a fast track. In short, a perfect afternoon for horsing.

Horsing has been a tradition at the Boone County Fair, and races have been held since the fair's inception in the 1855. Traditionally, the combined purse for the ten races is the largest premium paid for any event at the fair.

A good, enthusiastic crowd of all ages enjoyed the program, Admission to the grandstand is included in the price of entry to the fair.

Driver and trainer Jamaica Patton won the first two races. Patton, regarded as one of Illinois' best horsemen, drove Deputy Dawg to victory in the first race, a 1-miler for 2-year-old pacers, sponsored by the Boone County Fair. Patton did it again in the second race with Party of Two, for 2-year-old trotters, sponsored by Lee Auction Service.

Next it was time for the 3-year-olds, and once again, Jamaica Patton won the race for the pacers, this time with Somewhere Serious in a good, entertaining race to watch. It was a two-horse race, with Rockin Jack Sage leading most of the way. Somewhere Serious challenged several times, and was finally able to pull ahead at the 3/4 turn to win the race sponsored by the De Long Co.

Patton's luck changed in the 4th Race, sponsored in recognition of Glory-Bound Rescue Ranch in Marengo for 3-year-old trotters. The horses changed position several times, but at the end, No Show Jones, driven by Jamaica Patton was third behind On Glide and the winner, Cupcake Cassi, driven by J.D. Lewis.

Race 5 was a maiden race, sponsored by Weaver Stable, for a horse that's never won before. Prince of Style, a 4-year-year old horse that has never won a race, despite place and show winnings of over $24,000, largely at Hawthorne and Altamont, had his big day. Driven by Jamaica Patton, Prince of Style was able to beat a 2-year-old filly who had never raced before, Whackitifyougotit. By beating the younger girl, Prince of Style is no longer a maiden!

In the 6th race, sponsored in memory of Buck Weaver, Jay De Long driving Batten First beat Hawkeye Dewey by a neck. In the 7th race, the Buck and Lucy Weaver Memorial Free For All Trot, it was Blue Devil driven by Gary Rath in a strong race and finish.

In the 8th, sponsored by Union Federal, Jamaica Patton got another win driving The Pretty One, beating Princess Poppy. (Apparently feeling the competition, Joanie B was scratched!)

The 9th was your exciting race. A good, strong, fast race between 5 horses was decided in a photo finish. Lucky Leroy, driven by Cordarius Stewart defeated Reverend Scott, driven by Clifford O'Beirne, by a nose in a photo finish. It was clearly the most fun race of the day to watch.

In the 10th, Gary Rath won again, this time with Warrawee Veloce in a race sponsored in recognition of Del Insko Training Stable in South Beloit.

Horsing resumes next August at the Boone County Fair.

Drug Abuse in Boone County- What's the Real Problem Here?

By Mars Rinaldi

The Boone County Fair has come and gone, and we are all starting to focus on the upcoming fall season. The excitement from the fair and all those fall plans makes it easy to forget that, just a few weeks ago right across the street from the heart of all the activity, three individuals overdosed in the park; and one of them died. While few details are known at this time, the incident rubs an already raw subject with many in Boone County; where are these drugs coming from, and why does it seem like we have such a problem here?

The easiest reaction to this incident and others like it is, "How awful, but let's worry about that after the Fair." A quick glance on social media will show you a slew of other reactions, mostly tossing the blame at the usual targets. "The police don't do their jobs," or "there isn't enough funding for drug programs," or "well, that's what you get for doing drugs." The reality is that none of these are answers to the problem; these are all a different way of saying, "this is not my problem to solve;" and that is the real problem.

Earlier this year, The Journal ran an article about the Boone County Behavioral Health Task Force; a grant-funded initiative led by the Health Department and in cooperation with local law enforcement with the aim of tackling substance abuse and mental health crisis in a proactive way. Some of the programs offered deal directly with those in crisis and their families, while others offer education and training to the public in ways to help. The programs are funded by federal grants that the Task Force has secured, and the team works tirelessly to make sure that those who need these services are being contacted. Since its formation, the Task Force has had several local businesses and institutions come on board to supplement their programs. Program Manager Jessica Perillo shares that Swedish American Hospital in Belvidere works alongside the Comprehensive Opioid Abuse Reduction (COAR) Program to offer follow up services to individuals who have come into the Emergency Department due to overdose or intoxication. The Boone county jail has a program in-house to provide substance use assessment and treatments to inmates who are struggling; making the jail a place for recovery rather than retribution, and offering inmates a chance for recovery even before they are released. Through the available funding, the Task Force has been able to add staff that allow them to help people in non-substance related mental health crises.

As a community facing a drug problem, we are extremely fortunate to have these services available to those in need. According to Sheriff Shane Woody, "every county has a drug problem. Ours is no worse or better than other counties." Every county may have a drug problem, but not every county has a Task Force such as ours. The resources available to those battling addiction and mental health crises are only rivaled by the resources available for the families of those in these situations. Therefore, trying to push the blame for the problem on the police or a lack of funding is a fallacy.

In 2011, the American Society of Addiction Medicine and the American Medical Association came together to define addiction as a chronic brain disorder. Through years of scientific research, it has become clear and widely accepted that addiction is a disorder; not the result of poor choices or a lack of willpower or morals. A 2017 article from Dr. Jillian Hardee of the University of Michigan explains:

"In the healthy brain, dopamine is released in response to natural rewards, such as food or exercise, as a way of saying, "that was good." But drugs hijack dopamine pathways, teaching the brain that drugs are good, too. For example, some drugs have a structure similar to other chemical messengers in the brain, allowing them to bind to brain cells and release dopamine. Therefore, taking a drug produces a euphoric feeling, which in turn strongly reinforces drug-using behavior.

Drugs release two to 10 times the amount of dopamine that natural rewards release. How much is released depends on the type of drug; amphetamines, for example, release more dopamine than cocaine. As a result, the increased and sometimes constant influx of dopamine means feelings of reward, motivation or pleasure are also increased.

But if substance use continues, the brain produces less dopamine and/or reduces the number of brain structures that receive dopamine. Thus, dopamine's impact on the reward network diminishes, along with the individual's ability to experience pleasure."

Anyone who has faced addiction or had family members that have battled addiction will tell you that you cannot "shame away" addiction.

So, then, what's the real problem here? If you ask just about any rehabilitation counselor, they will tell you that the best chance that someone with an addiction is going to have for a success in recovery is real support from the people around them. Individually, those in recovery would ideally surround themselves with positive influences and people that will help them stay on-track. If we look at this from a community perspective, we are dealing with a larger number of individuals who need the same thing; who need positive influences

My clients have questions.
I provide answers.

They know that their taxes are prepared professionally, and they don't have to fear a letter from the IRS.

When was the last time you had a legal question? Or had some large organization try to intimidate you, and you really weren't sure of your rights. Did you know someone you could ask? Or did you just "wing it" and hope for the best? My clients know they can call me anytime for some quick advice.

Historically, lawyers have prepared tax returns. Using a tax attorney gives you a unique advantage: At least once a year, you can talk to an attorney and discuss what is important to you. We can discuss your will or trust, assist with an upcoming real estate transaction, or even put your business into an LLC to protect your assets. Or maybe just answer a question that's been bugging you for years.

My overhead is low, so my rates are reasonable, and things are done privately. There's no fish-bowl atmosphere or flimsy partitions. Hours are by appointment.

Owe the IRS money? Haven't filed? Afraid to file? Gotten a letter from them? I can help. With 35 years of experience as a tax attorney, I've helped many other people in your situation.

If your return consists of more than just a W-2, or you have a tax problem, please give me a call.

from those that surround them. For that, we can only look to ourselves. We are the community, and we have to make a decision to be part of the solution or part of the problem.

The Boone County Behavioral Health Task Force has so many resources for community members who want to be an active part of the solution. If you don't know exactly what to do when you see or know of someone in need, here are the answers to some of the most frequently asked questions:

What do I do if I see someone that appears to be in crisis (actively high or struggling to function)? Call 911 immediately.

What if I see someone who is functioning, but I suspect they need help? What is the best way to approach them and offer help? The nation has implemented a new suicide and mental health crisis lifeline- 988- to provide support to individuals who are struggling with a mental health issue. You can call or text 988 to get help when needed.

I think someone I know/ work with/ live with has a drug problem. What is the best way to bring it up and give them help?

Know that there are resources and support out there for you and your loved one. Even if that person is not ready to go to treatment yet, just letting them know that they have options is a good way to go. You can always call the Task Force or any local treatment center to ask for advice or submit a referral.

The Task Force also has resource cards with contact information for their programs. They are free and available at the Health Department, and now at the Boone County Journal. If you would like more of these cards to hand out, please contact the Behavioral Health Task Force program manager at 815-708-4123 or jperillo@boonehealth.org.

OP-ED

The Story of Life Explained, Rather Briefly

By Jim Nowlan

As I move into my 80s, I find myself standing back from the hurly-burly and mayhem of life around me, from local violence to the medieval barbarism in Ukraine. I can thus view matters with some detachment and, I hope, some understanding.

I draw for substance here on works like Stanford neuroscientist Robert Sapolsky's Behave and Harvard psychologist Steven Pinker's The Better Angels of Our Nature, among others. To start, I review some baseline human drives, which provide context, at least for me.

Like other animals, we strive to pass our DNA to successive generations. To increase our chances of success, we pursue increased "fitness," that is, the capacity to survive, even flourish, and become more attractive to possible mates. To display and boost our "fitness," the ambitious among us partake of something akin to the backyard childhood game "king of the hill."

There are many "hills." Some aspire to reach the top of their profession, or to pile up more wealth than others, or to win a Nobel, Pulitzer or other validating prize. All this signals high levels of attractive fitness to other humans.

Nations and national leaders have drives similar to those of their citizens—to increase national wealth, expand territory, build technological prowess, all this obviously increasing the stature and power, or fitness, of their nations.

In the backyard game, youngsters tried not only to ascend to the top of the pile, but also to pull others down from the top. So it is in the adult game of life.

The best example I that of is about the Jews. As a group, over the centuries, Jews have been disproportionately successful in achieving wealth as well as acclaim in science and the performing arts. Unfortunately, the incredibly powerful "us versus them" predisposition in humans, embedded in our brains over millions of years, dominates the mid-part of our noggin. Political leaders like Hitler have drawn upon this prejudice to try to pull Jews down from the hill.

Life is, as we observe firsthand, rough and tumble, never easy, or fair. Steven Pinker develops the thesis that since the Middle Ages the world has actually become less violent and homicidal. A thousand years ago, summer was "campaign season," that is, the recurring, hideously violent military campaigns of one king striving to take over the territory and wealth of another people. Life was cheap.

Pinker posits that over time humans are evolving to be nicer, for the reason that nice is, overall, a more successful strategy for humans and nations than is laying waste to people and property.

But we are evolving slowly, so violence still breaks out widely, frequently.

I think of life as a continuing walk through a minefield. Some of the mines you can see, sticking up, and avoid them. Sometimes you can follow in the footsteps of another, who has found a path through part of the minefield, thus sidestepping many of the mines, if you're careful. But there are other mines we can't see; some of us bypass them, through good fortune; others step on a mine, no matter careful, blowing themselves to smithereens, even causing havoc among friends nearby.

To deal with the never-ending vagaries of life, societies have developed cultural underpinnings: communities, religion, charitable organizations, liberal arts studies, libraries, governments and political parties, all to help us navigate life. As we thread our way through the "minefield," we tend to quest for a combination of order, harmony and prosperity.

The 17th Century English philosopher Thomas Hobbes observed, to illustrate, that the job of religion was "to soothe the human heart and restrain the beast within us," certainly helpful in navigating life.

As for political philosophies, I sense that, generally, liberals see the world as they wish it to be, while conservatives see the world as it is. A moderate conservative myself, I tend to like liberals better, as they are trying to make the world a better place. Yet, I find conservatives generally more practical. I sense a blend of the two perspectives would be most productive in navigation.

These thumbnail musings offer to me a couple of guidelines. First, aim high, but don't expect or shoot for perfection, which is beyond our reach; improvement will be success. Second, life is tough, always will be. So, rather than simply helping others, help others help themselves, as best they can. That will be more productive for others in the long run.

State Lays Out $34.6B Multi-Year Spending Plan for Roads, Bridges, Ports, Airports, Rail and Transit

Rebuild Illinois plan provides state funding backbone for latest annual multi-year plan

By Jerry Nowicki Capitol News Illinois

The Illinois Department of Transportation on Friday laid out a $34.6 billion six-year spending plan for road, bridge, transit, rail, airport and port upkeep.

It's the latest multi-year plan backed by the state's 2019 Rebuild Illinois bipartisan infrastructure law, which doubled the state's motor fuel tax from 19 to 38 cents per gallon and scheduled it to grow with the rate of inflation. That measure also increased driving-related fees, redirected a portion of the state's sales tax on motor fuel to the road fund and authorized borrowing to pay for construction projects.

"A little over three years ago, I signed our historic bipartisan infrastructure program into law," Gov. JB Pritzker said at a news conference at the IDOT building in Springfield. "And since then, Rebuild Illinois has undertaken a massive transformation of our state's transportation systems."

Approximately $8.6 billion has already been spent in the first three years of the Rebuild Illinois plan on road and bridge projects, including over $6.4 billion on the state transportation system and over $2.1 billion on local systems.

It's a slower pace than laid out in the six-year $33.2 billion spending plan passed in 2019. But IDOT Secretary Omer Osman said he's hopeful that the pace picks up as several large projects move beyond the initial engineering phase.

IDOT has expanded its engineering staff and lawmakers approved a "design-build" process in Senate Bill 2981 this year to combine the design and construction in a more efficient bidding process, which could also hasten things, he said.

"We are aggressively, aggressively pushing all these projects across the entire state," he said.

The highway portion of the multi-year plan – a required filing each year for the state's transportation agency – accounts for $24.6 billion of the planned spending. Of that, $13.3 billion, or 54 percent, is federally funded, just over $6 billion is state funding, $4.1 billion comes from bond proceeds, and $1.2 billion comes from local reimbursements.

The current fiscal year, which began July 1, is scheduled to see $3.7 billion in new construction under the road and bridge plan.

Another near-$10 billion in combined state, federal, local and private spending was laid out for transit, marine transportation, railways and airports. Of that, 59 percent was state spending and 31 percent federal.

Projects in that plan range from construction of high-speed rail between St. Louis and Chicago to airport upgrades to support for major port renovations at the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers near Cairo in southern Illinois.

Road projects are underway in all nine of the state's IDOT districts, from a $54 million interchange reconstruction, bridge replacement and repair on Interstate 80 in Will County, to $100.3 million for improvements on Interstate 24 from Metropolis to Interstate 57 in Massac, Johnson and Williamson counties.

"The renovation of nearly 4,500 miles of highway and over 400 bridges has already been completed, and virtually every Illinois resident can see and feel the results in real time," Pritzker said.

The bipartisan Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act signed into law by President Joe Biden last year allowed Illinois to expand its multi-year plan by $4 billion, Osman said.

The fact that Illinois had an infrastructure plan when the federal law passed, Pritzker said, made the state better equipped to take advantage of federal matching funding, which provides for an 80 percent federal match for a state's investment of 20 percent of certain projects' costs.

"Because we passed rebuild Illinois two-and-a-half years before the (federal law) was passed, we actually are shovel ready, we have the resources available," Pritzker said. "There are a lot of other states that have to come up with those dollars, don't know where they're going to come from. And so we're really in a position to do much more, much more quickly."

The Rebuild Illinois plan passed with overwhelming bipartisan majorities in Pritzker's first year as governor, marking the first state capital infrastructure plan in nearly a decade.

Spending

Lawmakers from both parties hailed it as forward-thinking for its automatic motor fuel tax increase, raised registration rates for electric vehicles, and the authorization of bonding to pay for construction.

The motor fuel tax and fee increase, contained in Senate Bill 1939 passed 48-9 in the Senate and 83-29 in the House. The spending plan, contained in House Bill 62, passed 95-18 in the House and 53-6 in the Senate. The bonding authority measure, contained in House Bill 142, passed 94-20 in the House and 53-6 in the Senate.

One lawmaker voting against all three portions of the plan was then-Rep. Darren Bailey, the Xenia Republican and current state senator who is challenging Pritzker in the 2022 governor’s race.

Bailey has frequently criticized the motor fuel tax increase, successfully using it as an avenue of attack against challengers in the Republican primary. But he hasn’t offered up an infrastructure funding plan of his own.

Asked for comment on the infrastructure plan and potential alternatives Friday, Bailey’s team issued a statement.

“JB Pritzker’s gas tax hike gave Illinois the second-highest gas tax in the country, and some of the highest gas prices. It is simply not affordable,” spokesperson Joe DeBose said in a statement. “48 states are able to build their transportation infrastructure with lower gas taxes than Illinois. We can do better with zero-based budgeting and reprioritizing spending, but not with J.B. Pritzker in charge.”

Osman, who has worked at IDOT for more than 30 years and became its director under Pritzker, said the motor fuel tax increase means infrastructure improvements can continue beyond Rebuild Illinois’ initial six-year lifespan.

“We are number three in the nation when it comes to interstate land mileage, and that’s a big statement to make,” he said. “Our system is complex, and we need that sustainable funding as we go down the road beyond the six years, for sure.”

“As many of you know, the Illinois State Fair, one of my favorite events of the year – and First Lady MK Pritzker and I could not be happier than when we come to the State Fair,” Pritzker said at the ceremony.

The first State Fair opened in Springfield in 1853. It then moved to several different cities before settling at its permanent location on Springfield’s north side in 1894. It has been held there every year since then, except for the years during World War II when the fairgrounds were used as a supply base for the Army Air Force. There also was no fair in 2020 due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The grounds are now undergoing major renovations with an infusion of $58.1 million from the Rebuild Illinois capital improvements program. Those include the repaving of several roads on the grounds, and major renovation to the coliseum and multi-purpose arena.

This year’s fair is also a special occasion for Secretary of State White, who is retiring in January after serving a record 24 years in that office. He served as the grand marshal of the twilight parade that took place Thursday evening.

The fair will run for the next 10 days, concluding Sunday, Aug. 21.

With New Food Packaging Labels on Grocery Shelves, What Do You Need to Know?

By Katie Zelechowski
Illinois Farm Bureau

Thanks to a recent labeling law, companies must indicate the presence of bioengineered food or ingredients on product packaging. Two moms and food sector experts explain what the new labels mean for grocery shoppers, and the technology behind them.

Congress passed the National Bioengineered Food Disclosure Law in 2016, with a mandatory compliance date of this year. Administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), the standard ensures food manufacturers disclose whether foods contain or may contain bioengineered, also known as genetically modified or GMO, ingredients using text or symbols on product packaging.

Shoppers might be surprised to learn that many of the products they've been eating for years have been improved through biotechnology. But the presence of new labels shouldn't stop them from making the same purchase decisions.

"Scientific research has shown time and time again that bioengineered foods are just as safe as their non-engineered counterparts," Flure said. She helps inform consumers about the science behind food production by contributing to GMOAnswers.com. She also consults for Bayer Crop Science.

For people who need a place to start, Flure suggests looking past random food package labels to read the nutrition facts panel on the back. That's where consumers will find details about how products affect their health.

"I think it's important to look for foods that are higher in fiber, higher in vitamins and minerals, and lower in things like saturated fat and sodium," she said.

While people might be unfamiliar with the terminology, innovative agricultural production techniques have been used for decades.

Sarah Gallo, vice president of agriculture and environment for the Biotechnology Innovation Organization (BIO), said biotechnology has continued to grow because more companies, farmers and even consumers recognize its benefits, like reducing food waste and decreasing the carbon footprint of growing food.

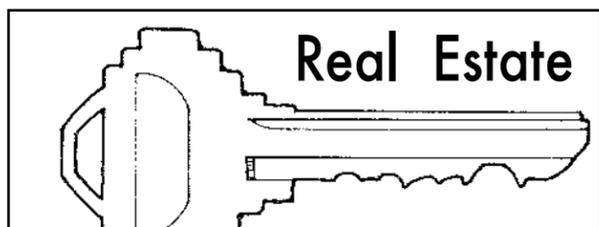

"We can always do a better job talking about those environmental benefits and how the pressure to continue to feed a population that's growing is going to need to have innovation as part of the solution – and I think there's a good history to demonstrate that," Gallo said.

BIO's member companies work across food systems, ag practices, biofuels and industrial-based processes to develop technology that improves products.

For example, biotechnology has been credited for saving the papaya from a devastating virus, seed that produces crops requiring less tillage and pesticides, and helping to lead the charge developing COVID-19 vaccines.

"Disruptive tech" developed by these, and other, companies continue to transform the American food system to increase food access and address climate change, according to Gallo.

"More of the technology that's coming into the market on the food side, and even on the industrial side, is really consumer-focused," Gallo said. "The reasons these products are coming to market are not only for the benefit of farmers but also for consumers and thinking about how they directly interact with the technology in their daily lives."
