County Clerk Sentenced for Theft

John Tuttle

On Sept. 2, the formal sentencing of Julie Bliss, former county clerk and recorder, was filed in Boone County. Bliss, 56, pleaded guilty to only some of the charges against her, most notably the theft of $28,919.05. This money was used by Bliss for personal purchases over the span of about a year, according to a forensic audit conducted by Sikich, a tech solutions company. Such purchases included, for example, new tires for a vehicle, said Tricia Smith, Boone County State's Attorney.

Bliss had been hired as a deputy clerk in 2013 and became county clerk four years later. She was re-elected to that office in 2018 and again in 2022. Then, in October 2023, after a deputy clerk at that time had found a discrepancy in the county's reconciliation work, Bliss was brought up on a litany of charges for the theft of government property of Boone County, wire fraud (the electronic transfer of ill-gotten sums of money), and official misconduct.

All 26 counts originally filed against Bliss were nothing short of felonies, ranging from Class 3, the sentence for which is usually two to five years, to Class 1, which can cost a guilty defendant four to 15 years in prison. A felony is the most serious criminal offense one can be charged with in court. It is no longer a petty wrong, no longer a misdemeanor, but an act that significantly harms the well-being of others in society. In her case, Bliss pleaded guilty to three charges: one count of theft (Class 1 felony) and two counts of official misconduct (Class 3 felonies).

The bill of indictment, which listed all the counts she was charged with, noted that Julie A. Bliss was formerly known as Julie A. Stapler. A background check for a Julie Ann Stapler (digitally accessed on Sept. 25 from Illinois State Police records), who shares the same Belvidere address as the defendant, suggests Stapler has also been known as Julie A. Ballard. Under that name, two misdemeanors are recorded: a bad check written in 1991 and another written in 1993, both in McLean County. Among the charges brought against Bliss in 2023 was "using county funds to pay a personal debt," according to a press release from the Office of Boone County State's Attorney.

In the nearly two-year period that it took to sentence Bliss, during which the county clerk was placed on administrative leave, but could not be fired, she earned roughly $225,000 in salary and benefits, according to current county administrator Becky Tobin. Bliss did not officially submit her resignation until July 31, 2025.

The maxim "Innocent until proven guilty" reflects one of the core tenets of the U.S. legal system. That is not what is under scrutiny in the county's response and desired reform, but rather the special privileges allotted to certain elected officials. For instance, access to some financial accounts under the clerk's jurisdiction was, by statute, limited to the clerk alone. Some years ago, the county hired tax and accounting firm Wipfli to develop an accounting manual with the hope of more thoroughly tracking transactions related to county accounts. "This document was completed in early 2024 and continues to be updated on an ongoing basis," County Administrator Tobin told the Journal by email. "This is a great tool for current and future employees to help strengthen the internal controls throughout the County."

The manual was implemented only after the grand jury indicted Bliss. Moreover, the county took further measures, opening up access to the county clerk operating account and the tax redemption account, allowing both the county administrator and the treasurer to be privy to the funds and transactions exchanged. Previously, it was only mandatory for the county clerk to have access to those two accounts.

However, according to Treasurer Curtis Newport: "Generally speaking, we cannot force an elected official to implement internal controls without his/her cooperation." This even goes for the new accounting procedures manual. "Again, we cannot compel any specific elected official to follow it," Newport said via email.

Likewise, the county cannot fire or force an accused elected public servant to resign prior to conviction in court. Because of that, Bliss accumulated over two hundred thousand dollars in the interim between her indictment and her resignation. A similar case involving an elected official in Winnebago County stealing funds, which also dragged on for two years, occurred in 2022. The Winnebago official retained his position during those years.

Illinois has no legal instrument in place to remove an elected official who has been charged with a crime, but not yet found guilty in court. Boone County State Attorney Tricia Smith and other local officials promoted a 2022 Senate bill to create a mechanism that would allow for elected officials "charged with crimes relating to their office" to be removed. Though it met with some bipartisan approval (it was sponsored by both Democrat Senator Steve Stadelman and Republican Senator Dave Syverson), the bill eventually died in committee. Such a measure would have to be filed again under a new bill and passed into law for it to take effect.

Meanwhile, it is expected that County Board Chairman Karl Johnson will appoint a new county clerk at a special county board meeting on October 2. The new clerk will then serve out the term until Nov. 30, 2026.

"I look forward to seeing a new County Clerk and Recorder appointed and sworn in soon," said Newport. "In view of the circumstances, I sincerely hope the new office holder will work with me and the County Administrator to establish solid internal controls designed to prevent and detect fraud and theft."

Boone County Assessment Office Relocates

Emely Villarejo

The Boone County Assessment Office has moved to a temporary location while renovations take place at the County's Logan Avenue Campus. The change makes room for the Health Department to expand and add space for more staff and services.

During this period, the Assessment Office is operating out of the Emergency Management Office at 1459 McKinley Avenue. Most services are available at the temporary site, but some physical records remain at the Logan facility due to space limitations. Residents who need access to those records should contact the Assessment Office at 815-544-2958 to make arrangements to access them.

Once the project is completed, the Assessment Office will move into the Administration Building at 1212 Logan Avenue. The new setup will place the Assessment Office next to the County Clerk and Treasurer. This centralized location will provide a one-stop service for residents, allowing them to handle multiple county services. County officials say this will ultimately improve efficiency, and make visits easier, especially during poor weather, and for elderly residents who previously had to walk between separate buildings.

Construction is scheduled for completion by October 2026. Scandroli Construction is overseeing the work, with Kluber Architects handling the design.

Statement From Senator Stadelman

Press Release

"I'm extremely disappointed with Nexstar Corporation, owner of the local ABC affiliate WTVO-TV.

Even though ABC's parent corporation Walt Disney allowed Jimmy Kimmel to return to his late-night show last night, it was not seen on ABC stations owned by Nexstar, including in Rockford.

The Federal Communications Commission -- now with the aid of the Nexstar broadcast group -- is threatening free speech and first amendment rights.

Last week, Federal Communications Chairman Brendan Carr made an unprecedented warning that "we can do this the easy way or the hard way" while urging ABC and its affiliates to take action against Kimmel for remarks he made on his show following the killing of conservative activist Charlie Kirk.

Kimmel said it best himself last night. Whether you like him or not, whether you support his show or not, we should support his right to poke fun at the president and to share his beliefs.

The ability to make fun of political leaders and criticize them is what makes America great. Threats by the FCC to take away broadcast licenses because the president and his supporters don't like what was said about them is UN-American.

As a former TV journalist who worked for 25 years at WTVO, I'm alarmed over the Trump administration's aggressive moves against the media. This is the latest in a string of attacks against news outlets and media figures just because they're critical of him. Trump has filed lawsuits against outlets whose coverage he dislikes and seeks to bend media companies and other organizations to his will.

In fact, I passed legislation this past spring in the Illinois General Assembly that allows journalists and companies that employ them to stop frivolous lawsuits from people who don't like what was written or said about them.

Donald Trump can't dictate what Americans can say. And government can't be allowed to control what is done and said on television.

People need to speak out and make their voices heard. That's the only way to fight back against efforts by this administration to silence critics.

It's shocking to see the willingness of some major U.S. companies to accommodate FCC threats.

Viewers need to be aware that Nexstar has pending business before the FCC. It's trying to merge with another big station group. Right now, the company is vulnerable to Chairman Carr's public pressure and is bending a knee to the president so he will approve its merger.

This should not be a Democrat or Republican issue. This should not be a liberal or conservative issue. We should all protect free speech. Even Republican U.S. Senator Ted Cruz said FCC actions are unbelievably dangerous and compared Carr's rhetoric to mob tactics.

Government should not put itself in the position of saying we don't like what you're saying so we're going to threaten to take you off the air.

Finally, I want to make the point that I'm not criticizing local employees of WTVO and WQRF -- but I am criticizing their corporate bosses. If American corporations think they can preserve their independence and integrity by "making deals" with a strongman, they're wrong. This tactic will only worsen.

We must protect our first amendment freedoms."

Illinois Declined to Give Sensitive Voter Data to the DOJ Some GOP States Are Doing the Same

Illinois cited privacy concerns when denying the feds' request earlier this month

By: Jonathan Shorman Stateline.org

When the U.S. Department of Justice asked Kansas Republican Secretary of State Scott Schwab to turn over a copy of his state's full voter list, including sensitive personal data, he responded with gratitude for the Trump administration.

"We appreciate the efforts of DOJ and other federal partners to assist in ensuring states have access to federal resources" to maintain voter rolls, Schwab wrote in an Aug. 21 letter to the agency.

But Schwab did not provide the full data the Justice Department wanted. Instead, the second-term state secretary of state and candidate for governor wrote that he was "initially" giving its lawyers only publicly available voter information.

It's a similar response to the one given in deep blue Illinois, where the Illinois State Elections Board, not the secretary of state, oversees elections.

"We take Illinoisans' privacy very seriously; data breaches and hacking are unfortunately common, and the disclosure of sensitive information contrary to state law would expose our residents to undue risk," ISBE general counsel Marni Malowitz wrote the DOJ on Sept. 2.

A spokesperson for Illinois' elections board said Monday the state has not heard from the DOJ since sending that letter.

As the Trump administration demands that states turn over voter data, some Republican state officials are pushing back.

At least four states with Republican chief election officials have offered public data but not the sensitive information — driver's license and partial Social Security numbers — sought by the Justice Department, even as they take pains not to pick a fight with President Donald Trump. Another has refused to turn over any data.

Mixed compliance

One state so far has given the federal government everything and another appears likely to follow.

On Friday, Indiana Secretary of State Diego Morales, a Republican, confirmed he provided the Justice Department with all the requested data, making Indiana the first known state to hand over sensitive personal information. And in South Carolina, the state Supreme Court has cleared the way for election officials to share its data.

Many Democrats and even some Republicans fear Trump wants to use the voter data to build a federal database of voters he can use to target political opponents or hype rare instances of non-citizen voting.

"Well, it's clear why they're hunting around for voter data, right? They're trying to say that in the next election, that there will be fraud because they know they're going to lose," Illinois Gov. JB Pritzker said in late August. "They are looking, essentially, to say that, well, we found somebody who died who's still on the rolls, and therefore there's fraud, and therefore these elections are fraudulent and should be overturned."

Pritzker Directs Agencies to Limit Spending in Response To Trump's Economic Policies

Governor's order cites fears of slow economic growth triggered by tariffs, 'One Big Beautiful Bill'

Ben Szalinski Capitol News Illinois

Illinois agencies must identify spending reductions and create reserves in their budgets to prepare for an economic downturn, according to an executive order issued Tuesday by Gov. JB Pritzker.

Pritzker said the order is designed to combat federal policies by the Trump administration that are likely to increase costs on the state and put pressure on the economy. The latest order requires most state agencies to, within 30 days, "identify immediate spending reductions, including efficiencies that will result in reduced spending."

Pritzker also directed the agencies to reserve 4% of fiscal year 2026 general fund appropriations. Lawmakers approved a $55.1 billion spending plan, meaning the order could halt up to $2.2 billion in approved spending in anticipation of state revenue declining.

Some state agencies, such as the State Board of Education and the state's pension systems, are not subject to the order to identify spending cuts.

Pritzker also ordered agencies that find budget shortfalls to identify lines in their budgets that can be reduced. The order also directed agencies to pause nonessential purchases and travel.

"It's a beginning of dealing with what we think could be a very severe challenge for the state budget this year," Pritzker told reporters in Joliet. "Remember, we can only identify what we know. Here's something that I'm very concerned about, which is that the budget is affected vastly by the economic situation of the country, and we're already seeing that

At the same time, supporters of the effort say the Justice Department is focused on maintaining accurate voter rolls.

For Republicans, the demands pit the traditional conservative belief in states' authority — and their skepticism of federal power — against the will of a president who holds a vise-like grip over their party. They also come after Trump spent years advancing the false claim that he won the 2020 election.

The Justice Department, controlled by Trump allies, has contacted over half of the states and signaled it will eventually reach out to all of them, ensuring more GOP officials will likely confront choices over what to give the administration. Their responses will go a long way in determining whether the department succeeds in obtaining personal data on tens of millions of American voters.

"It raises concerns to me about trust, about transparency, about the potential for politicizing a process that folks on all sides of the political spectrum need to feel comfortable and confident is being handled appropriately," said Matt Germer, director of the Governance Program at the R Street Institute, a center-right think tank in Washington, D.C.

Germer, who calls himself a pro-democracy conservative, said others like him, as well as many Democrats, "have some worry that this is less about building a case against specific incidents of fraud and more about sowing fear in election processes."

While Republicans have taken varied approaches to the demands, Democratic election officials have largely spurned them. They warn Trump is encroaching on the authority of states to run elections and are fearful of how he may use the data. Some Democrats have pointed the administration to publicly available data, but others have fully refused the requests.

Illinois sent the feds the same data it makes available to political parties and government entities. It includes the voters' names and addresses, their age at the time the registration was completed, and the voting jurisdictions in which they reside. It also contains voting history, including which elections they voted in and, in the case of primary elections, which party's ballot they selected.

The Justice Department on Tuesday announced it was suing the Democratic secretaries of state in Maine and Oregon over their refusal to provide voter data. The lawsuits mark the first legal challenges the department has brought against states in its effort to obtain voter registration records across the country.

At least 27 states have so far received a demand from the Justice Department for voter data, according to the Brennan Center for Justice at New York University, which tracks the requests. Fifteen of the states were won by Trump.

Along with Kansas, Republican election officials in Alaska, Florida and Utah have so far offered only public voter data. New Hampshire's Republican secretary of state has turned over no data, citing restrictions in state law, and Texas officials have said they can't currently provide a copy of their voter rolls because of ongoing technical upgrades.

Trump's election efforts

Since taking office in January, Trump has tried to exert unilateral control over elections, mostly unsuccessfully. Federal courts blocked an executive order in March that attempted to require voters to prove their citizenship when registering. He threatened to sign another order purporting to ban mail-in ballots but has so far not followed through.

The Constitution gives states the authority to administer elections and Congress the power to step in and set national election standards and regulations. Federal legislation that would implement a proof-of-citizenship voter registration requirement passed the U.S. House this spring, but hasn't advanced in the Senate.

Even without a nationwide proof-of-citizenship requirement, the Trump administration is assembling a patchwork operation to find noncitizen voting, which is an extremely rare phenomenon. As the Trump administration presses states for voter rolls, it confirmed last week that the Justice Department is sharing voter data with the Department of Homeland Security, which runs a powerful online search program that can identify noncitizens and verify citizenship.

Several election experts question whether the Justice Department has the authority to demand the voter data and say it's misinterpreting federal law. "There is zero federal law that entitles the Department of Justice to that sensitive data," said David Becker, executive director of the nonpartisan Center for Election Innovation & Research.

The Justice Department said in a statement to Stateline that Congress gave the department authority under multiple federal laws to ensure states have proper voter registration programs and procedures to keep voter rolls free of ineligible voters. The requests for voter rolls have been made under that authority, it said.

"States simply cannot pick and choose which federal laws they will comply with, including our voting laws, which ensure that all American citizens have equal access to the ballot in federal elections," Assistant Attorney General Harmeet K. Dhillon, who leads the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, said in the news release announcing lawsuits against Maine and Oregon.

Navigating DOJ demands

In New Hampshire, Republican Secretary of State David Scanlan has twice refused the Justice Department. Scanlan first declined to provide the state's voter list in July; after the agency pressed him again, he sent a four-paragraph letter reiterating his position.

Dhillon responded to Scanlan in a letter Aug. 18 that the department was entitled to the voter data under federal record retention laws. She wrote that the agency needed the data to determine whether New Hampshire is complying with the Help America Vote Act, a 2002 federal law that revamped election administration in the wake of the disputed 2000 presidential election.

Scanlan has said New Hampshire law is clear in only permitting the secretary of state to release voter lists, without sensitive personal information, in limited circumstances. Political parties, political committees and candidates may request the list; other outside organizations and agencies, like the Justice Department, cannot.

Scanlan, first elected in 2022, has avoided politically charged rhetoric during the dispute over the voter list. He will be up for reelection next year, but not before voters. In New Hampshire, the Republican-controlled legislature elects the secretary of state every two years.

In an interview with Stateline, Scanlan said he's approached the situation in a "matter of fact" manner.

"I know other states may have different statutes that allow them to provide that information and beyond that, I really don't have strong feelings about where this goes," Scanlan said.

"I'm just going to administer the New Hampshire statutes, taking into consideration what may apply at the federal level through statute or through the courts," he said. "But for the time being, I think our position is pretty clear."

Schwab, the Kansas Republican secretary of state, will face voters next year — but as a candidate for governor. A former state lawmaker first elected secretary of state in 2018, he is running in a large Republican primary field where candidates, including him, are competing to link themselves to Trump.

But Schwab has also long taken a clear stance against election denialism and knocked down false claims about Kansas elections. In 2022 he won a primary election, 55%-45%, that pitted him against a Republican activist who promoted conspiracy theories about the 2020 presidential election.

As the Justice Department push for voter rolls moves forward, Schwab has attempted to find a middle ground. He provided only Kansas's public voter data, but held open the possibility of turning over more. And in his August letter to the department, he praised the Trump administration's priorities on election security.

"We agree that routine voter maintenance is critical to ensuring accurate voter rolls and confidence in elections," Schwab wrote.

Schwab declined Stateline's interview request. In response to questions, John Milburn, a spokesperson for the Kansas Secretary of State's Office, wrote in an email: "We remain in conversation with the DOJ and have no further information or comment at this time."

Trey Grayson, a former Republican Kentucky secretary of state in the 2000s, said if he was in office, he could see potentially providing publicly available voter data to the Justice Department. The department is an entity "you have to take seriously," Grayson said, though he added he wished it would disclose more about how it plans to use the information.

There's also politics.

"President Trump today in 2025 is more popular, more influential, more powerful within the Republican Party than he was in 2017," said Grayson, who sits on the board of the Center for Election Innovation & Research, a nonprofit organization that works to build confidence in elections.

Indiana, South Carolina support data sharing

Morales, the Indiana Republican secretary of state, invoked Trump when he announced last week he had shared full voter data, including driver's license and partial Social Security numbers, with the Justice Department.

"If providing the Justice Department information can help Indiana with ensuring our voter list is accurate and up to date, we will do so. We will take all the help we can get. I am proud to work with President Trump and his administration to strengthen election integrity," Morales said at a news conference on Friday.

A former aide to Mike Pence while he was governor of Indiana, Morales was elected in 2022 after calling the 2020 election a "scam" and writing the "outcome is questionable."

Morales made the disclosure about the voter list in response to reporters' questions, but he had called the news conference to highlight an alleged case of noncitizen voting by a man with a Mexican passport who had voted six times since 2018. He didn't identify the man, and criminal charges don't appear to have been filed.

The decision to turn over the data disappointed Julia Vaughn, executive director of Common Cause Indiana, a voting rights group. She said her organization is prepared to challenge in court any unlawful sharing of the voter list for illegal purposes.

"We're concerned about his willingness to allow the federal government to interfere in the administration of Indiana elections," Vaughn said.

In South Carolina, Republican Gov. Henry McMaster went to court, fighting to allow officials to share the full voter list with the Justice Department. After the South Carolina State Election Commission received a request for the voter list in August, a registered voter sued to block its release.

Last week, the South Carolina Supreme Court, in a decision on procedural grounds, cleared the way for the state to hand over the data while the lawsuit plays out in court.

Speaking with reporters earlier this month, McMaster cast the sensitive data as already in the possession of the government and pointed out that the federal government created Social Security.

McMaster noted the South Carolina Constitution contains a right to privacy, but said the Justice Department's request wasn't an illegal overreach. "The federal government does have the authority to ask for these things," he said.

But as the Trump administration seeks voter lists, Germer, of the R Street Institute, voiced concern about what the demands could mean for the future. The collection effort is beginning to set a precedent and a mechanism for future data grabs, he cautioned.

"It's important to remember that these kinds of actions don't occur in a vacuum," Germer said, adding that "we live in a world where one president takes action and the next president builds upon it."

The Indiana Capital Chronicle's Whitney Downard contributed reporting. Stateline reporter Jonathan Shorman can be reached at jshorman@stateline.org.

states like Iowa are in recession."

General Assembly Republicans voted against the budget, and House Minority Leader Tony McCombie, R-Savanna, said her party was sounding the alarm about pressure on the state budget before President Donald Trump's second term.

"We warned that this budget was irresponsible and overspent," she said in a statement. "Stop passing blame, Governor. Illinoisans aren't buying that recent policy changes in Washington, D.C., are to blame for the decades of Illinois financial mismanagement."

Trump-driven fears

Pritzker said Trump's policies are driving fears about declining revenues.

Pritzker noted the "One Big Beautiful Bill Act," signed by Trump in July, is at the top of the list because it passes costs for several federal programs down to the states.

Congress, for example, required states to pay a greater portion of administrative and benefits costs for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program. Congress also tightened access to other programs, such as Medicaid, meaning it will be up to states to close funding gaps to allow many people to stay on the program.

The bill also extended tax cuts for businesses and wealthy Americans. The order said much of Illinois' tax code is tied to the federal tax code and Illinois will see revenue decline because of these tax cuts at the federal level.

The executive order also said tariffs will hurt consumer spending by increasing costs.

"There are hundreds of millions of dollars that are going to have to be made up for as a result of the cuts the federal government is making, including in health care and nutritional assistance, but also across the economy, with the tariffs that are impacting businesses in Illinois," Pritzker said. "So we think this is a prudent endeavor."

Legislative Democrats anticipated that federal policies would affect state coffers and established a $100 million BRIDGE fund — short for Budget Reserve for Immediate Disbursements and Governmental Emergencies — with money swept from 57 different funds. Pritzker can tap into that fund "in the event of unanticipated delays in or failures of revenues."

The state agencies will report their 4% spending reserves and reductions to the governor's office the same week some agencies must also report on the effects of tariffs.

Pritzker signed another executive order in July that requires seven state agencies to "consider the specific impacts that the U.S. tariffs have had on Illinois and provide draft recommendations of measures to mitigate the impact of these tariffs."

Economic indicators

Recent economic reports have suggested the economy is struggling. The August jobs report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics found the U.S. added just 22,000 jobs in August and lost 13,000 in June.

Illinois struggled even more in August with the Illinois Department of Employment Security's preliminary report on job growth showing the state lost 13,300 non-farm jobs last month.

sion on Government Forecasting and Accountability reported in early September the state has added just 4,600 jobs on a seasonally adjusted basis since December. Unemployment in Illinois declined to 4.4% in August — continuing a yearlong trend — but COGFA's report said that's because the state's labor force has been shrinking because of "demographic trends" and lower immigration rates.

The state's general revenues were $37 million higher through the first two months of the fiscal year compared to last year, according to COGFA, but that's largely thanks to transfer from another state fund. Personal income tax receipts are down 1% and corporate income tax receipts are down 21% so far this year.

This publication is made in accordance with Section 12-10 of the Property Tax Code and serves as public notice to the taxpayers of Boone County of the assessed values fixed upon their property by the Township Assessor or Supervisor of Assessments.
